If the observance of this day is justly and truly to brighten our national hopes and national prospects, it must be by quickening us to acknowledge in all our national affairs the supremacy of the Most High. Godliness is the great want of this nation, and that is the idea I wish now to impress upon our minds and hearts. We have intelligence enough. At least never before with any people was knowledge so generally diffused among all classes. We have enough of personal liberty, liberty of thought, of speech, of conscience, of published creeds and forms of worship, of secular pursuits and private enterprise.
