Purchasers can download a free scanned copy of the original book (without typos) from the publisher. Not indexed. Not illustrated. 1922 Excerpt: . industrial schools generally covers two, three, or four years, as the conditions in the particular industry demand. Special continuation courses are opened for the apprentices in the various branches of industry. Admission to these schools is limited to those 14 years old who have finished 8 years of the elementary school, but in outlying districts pupils under this age are allowed to enter. The great variety of schools indicates the range of industries prevalent in the country. There are schools for machinists, metal trades, electricians, stonemasons, cabinetmakers, schools for weaving, basketry, glassmaking, pottery, and a number of others. Girls receive instruction in dressmaking, millinery, embroidery, and cooking. Students in the various industrial schools. COMMERCIAL EDUCATION. Commercial education is provided by commercial academies which offer advanced commercial training and commercial schools which prepare for office and ordinary business affairs. Commercial schools pertain to the ministry of education and, consequently, like other types of schools, are under State control. They are remarkably uniform in regard to administration, programs of instruction, and internal regulations. The commercial academies are secondary institutions with a fouryear course of study. A certificate attesting the completion of the higher primary school or the four lower classes in a secondary school is the minimum requirement for admission. Course of study in commercial academies. Much attention is paid to the study of languages. In addition to Czech, instruction is offered in practically all the modern languages of Europe--English, French, Italian, German, Russian, Serbian, Croatian, and...
