The Painted Turtle has the carapace ovate, depressed, without keel, smooth, margin flaring slightly, never serrated posteriorly and but slightly notched. Plastron immovable. Alveolar surface of jaw narrow, well marked except in front; upper jaw notched in front. Olive or greenish black, plates margined with paler, opposite, slightly imbricated; marginal plates marked with bright red; plastron yellow, often blotched with brown. Length of shell occasionally six inches. This is one of the common turtles seen in ponds, ditches, and shallow streams, in rows ou stones, logs and banks, and which upon the slightest alarm slide into the water and hide in mud, swim away, or stir up the mud and thus cloud the water so as to be concealed. Holbrook says of the Painted Turtle that it frequents ditches, ponds...
