Not illustrated. 1922 Excerpt: .A STUDY OF THE TEACHING OF AGRICULTURE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS OF TEXAS Martin L. Hayes Professor of Vocational Teaching, Agricultural and Mechanical College of Texas Introduction In the short time that was available for this study it seemed best to limit the study to the high-school work. It was impossible in the time limit to study all the elementary schools and test out the agricultural teaching. It is hereby recommended that such a study be made by the State Department of Education or such committee or individual as the State Board of Education may designate. SECURING THE DATA The information had not been tabulated in the State Department of Education so that the list of teachers of highschool agriculture could be secured. A questionnaire was sent out to all the county superintendents asking for the name and addresses of each white teacher in the county teaching agriculture to students above the seventh grade. Replies were received from 56 county superintendents reporting 440 names. Of the 440 questionnaires sent to these teachers, 119 were returned in time for this report. Of the 119 replies, 11 reported that agriculture was not being taught, 26 reports showed that the course being taught was not being taken by high-school students, 70 reports indicated that the course was of high-school grade and general in nature rather than vocational, 12 indicated classes under the provisions of the Smith-Hughes Act. In non-vocational agriculture the study is limited to the reports of 70 schools;...
