Excerpt: .dismissed, taking up his old position in front-of the fire, and all three discuss ing poor dear Grette, and then she was angry with herself for ever so many things she had said and done. She did not feel at all well for several days afterwards, but then there came a week of fine, hard, bracing weather, and she improved rapidly once more. With returning health and strength her determination to study nursing grew. It was not exactly the work she would have chosen, but it seemed to her the most accessible; and she had vague ideas of some day leaving the hospital and of doing something on her own account; although what that something was to be she could not tell. Clearly something was wanted; she could not go anywhere, among any class without feeling that. In her heart she thought it was knowledge and love of God s laws of health more than nursing (which after all is but a patchwork affair without that knowledge and love) that was really wanted; but going into a hospital seemed to her the readiest and most thorough way of acquiring that knowledge herself. One day she called on the wife of the village doctor, and in the course of conversation referred to her intention. You are the fourth girl who has spoken to me about nursing within the last few days, exclaimed the doctor s wife. It is a fashionable mania just now. Every girl...
