Hearing thy voice, no former joy seems fair--Since now one only thing could bring despair, One grief, like compassing seas, my life surround, One only horror in my way be met, One great eclipse change my glad heart to-night, One phantom only turn from red to white The lips whereon thy dear lips have been set; Thou knowest well, dear love, what that must be--The dread of some dark day unshared by thee! It was late in November when Mr. and Mrs. Power came home. Both husband and wife were keenly touched by the enthusiastic reception they met with from their tenantry, who worshipped their landVol. in. 38 lord, in spite of his long absences, and for his sake were ready to worship Delicia also. Though the popular opinion in Carlford was that Miss Cora would have suited him better. Delicia had never quite won the hearts of the villagers; indeed, she had never tried. She had earnestly done her best to improve their morals; she had never thought of their hearts at all. The newly married pair lived in quite a whirl of county entertainments for the first few weeks after their return, which gaieties, to tell the truth, they would both much rather have shirked altogether. It was now January, and Power already talked of their going up to town, for Parliament was to open early that year. Mrs. Lavender had given up Dene Cottage some months ago, for...
