[.]girl world was at liberty. I would just begin a morning s work when some one would call me on the telephone to go to the dressmaker s with her, or help arrange the flowers for a dinner party. I loved both flowers and dresses, and it was easy to think, Oh! I ll practise this afternoon! and fly off to be gone all day. In the evening there was my fiance who had to tell me all the absorbing details of his office, or there was a dance, or a theatre party, and I took everything that came my way and enjoyed it all equally. But all the time my voice was really first in my thoughts, and I longed to study seriously and intensely, to arrange my whole life for it and its proper[.].
