To this investigation, when fairly and dispassionately pursued, none can be opposed, in whose bosoms predominates a principle of Benevolence to the human race. Whatever is published to the world as Truth, and more especially when represented to be sanctioned by the God of Truth, should by all possessed of reason, understanding and conscience, be freely examined. It is, therefore, among those only, who possess zeal without knowledge, that any thing like rancour or enmity, can arise or exist, on account of the proper exercise of this right; and, more especially, when employed in religious discussion. Every theory in which, even the temporal interests of man are involved, it is considered as meritorious to analyse with the most unreserved scrutiny. Why then should a sincere examination of that which so nearly concerns his eternal Destiny, be more restricted, or given over, as it too often is, to implicit faith in, and passive obedience to, mere man? Neither reason, nor revelation inculcates a dogma so absurd, and so inconsistent with those mental endowments, bestowed upon us by the divine author of our being. The genuine characteristic of that religious worship which Christ taught the world is, that it is pure and spiritual. Pure, with respect to its exemption from the pride and impiety of the unrenewed heart...
